"Things between Rob and Kristen are really weird right now," says a source close to the couple. "It will be a long time before he's comfortable letting her out of his sight."

ON A SHORT LEASH!

“You could just see that Rob has the upper hand.”

— a friend tells Star

FOR years, Kristen Stewart and Robert Pattinson took great pains to keep their relationship private, shunning public displays of affection and refusing to acknowledge their love. But now, all of a sudden, they’ve been holding hands on the red carpet and even kissing in bars! Ever since Rob, 26, agreed to take Kristen, 22, back following her shocking affair with married 41-year-old director Rupert Sanders, they’ve been acting like a completely different couple. What gives?

PROVING HERSELF

“Kristen is going out of her way to appease Rob and do what he wants,” a source close to the actress tells Star. For example: While out with friends at the Los Feliz, Calif., hotspot Ye Rustic Inn on Oct. 13, “Kristen was fawning all over Rob, leaning on him and being much more affectionate than he was,” an eyewitness reports. “You could just see that he had the upper hand. They’ve been in here before, and Kristen was always very cold. But now, if Rob wants a kiss, she plants one right on his lips!”

A month later, Kristen’s overcompensating for her transgression still hadn’t let up. At the Nov. 14 London premiere of their last film together, The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn — Part 2, Rob insisted that Kristen hold his hand on the red carpet — something they’d never done before, in four years of dating. “Kristen went along with it, but she truly hates it,” her friend reveals. “You can see it in her body language. She looks really awkward and uncomfortable.”

SPY GAMES

At the core of Kristen’s uncharacteristic behavior is the fact that Rob still doesn’t trust her. After all, she broke his heart and humiliated him when she got caught cheating — and he is determined to keep her from hurting him again. “Rob has Kristen on 24-hour surveillance these days; if she steps out of line, he knows about it,” the insider reveals. “If he can’t be with her, he has her chaperoned by a friend. She has to check in with him several times a day, and he’s even demanded access to her phone and her email.”

As over-the-top as all this seems, however, Rob’s reaction isn’t so strange. “It’s normal to be paranoid after being cheated on,” relationship expert Seth Meyers tells Star. “Rob most likely feels that he needs to have control of the relationship because he’s seen what can happen if he doesn’t. People who have been hurt know that they have the upper hand, and it’s expected for them to take advantage of that.” But, Meyers cautions, “Couples who get back together after such a flagrant transgression rarely last in the end.”

As for Kristen, her friends worry that her new role in the relationship is unhealthy — but she refuses to listen to them. Explains the insider: “She just keeps saying that she lost Rob once and she will never lose him again.”
